Over the last few years, market sentiment has veered from infectious exuberance to biting despondency to renewed optimism. From queuing for cyclicals and rate-sensitive stocks to obsessing about 'quality' stocks, different themes have swayed investors during this period.

In such a confounding scenario, a handful of equity fund managers have burnished their reputation as astute stock pickers. Following on last year's study, ET Wealth in association with mutual fund research firm Morningstar, has brought out the best equity fund manager rankings for 2016.

These fund managers drowned out the market noise to build portfolios with high conviction bets and stayed the course to deliver high returns for investors. Their success, in no small measure, is also owed to the robust processes established at respective fund houses, in addition to the critical contribution of in-house research teams.

Many on this list have managed funds from the mid- and small-cap basket and have been helped by the sharp uptick in the segment. Others may have missed out owing to a lower presence in this space, despite being highly proficient in running their mandates.

As the market situation evolves, some of the names in this year's list could easily make way for others. But, whatever the market position, investors are likely to have a good experience with these capable fund managers. Read on to know how these investing wizards ply their craft and ensured that investors who trusted them with their money had a great experience.
